

The Usage Guidelines of Bili

Please note that the Bili dataset is derived from an image dataset paper that we have not yet published. Any use of the dataset in papers (including personal modifications) requires notification via email to us.

During your paper submission phase, it is sufficient to cite our SIGIR2023 paper "Where to Go Next for Recommender Systems? ID- vs. Modality-based Recommender Models Revisited [1]." However, if your paper is to be publicly released (either in the camera-ready version or in arxiv), the appearance of the Bili dataset in the paper must include a footnote stating that 'According to the provider of the Bili dataset, it is currently available only through email, and the paper introducing Bili has not been publicly released. Any use of this dataset in research papers requires notification to the authors in [1] via email.'

Once your online paper version is available, please send the names of all authors, affiliations, paper title, and publication venue (e.g., arxiv, workshop, conference, or journal) to yuanfajie@westlake.edu.cn, yuanzheng@westlake.edu.cn, and lifengyi@westlake.edu.cn. We will keep a record of this information.

When the Bili dataset paper has been published, we will notify you. If your paper is not yet in the camera-ready stage, please cite this paper.

When requesting the dataset, please use an official email and include your name and affiliation information. Additionally, please provide a signature indicating your agreement with this usage license. Please note that it is not permissible to distribute the dataset online or share the download link with other researchers. Once again, any use of this dataset in research papers requires prior notification to our authors.

Please adhere to the guidelines mentioned above when using this dataset. Even if the same author publishes a second paper, notification via email is still required. Any use of the dataset in papers without prior notification is not permitted.

Please complete the attached form and provide your signature at the bottom. We require a signed license as an attachment in the email.
